From the book, The Promise of a New Day

Broadening our vision beyond our self-serving needs and acknowledging the importance of others in our lives not only lifts their spirits, but also fosters positive feelings within ourselves. Our personal happiness grows when we nourish someone else's.

That which we give to others will be given to us in time. In order to find peace, we must behave peacefully toward others. And to receive love, we must willingly and unconditionally offer it. When we try to control others' behavior, we meet resistance. We can be certain an aggressive stance invites adversity. How true is the axiom "we reap that which we sow"

My behavior invites the treatment I'll receive today. I am free to act lovingly, respectfully, and peacefully.
